REPORT OF THE ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR
FOR PROGRAM PLANNING AND EVALUATION

1975 - 1980

SUPPLEMENT

January 1981

Prepared by the Office of the
Associate Director for
Program Planning and Evaluation

PREFACE

This roster of personnel and accompanying organization charts, beginning in 1952, supplement the program report of the Associate Director for Program Planning and Evaluation, 1975-1980. That document includes a short history of the OPPE prepared by Bruce F. Carson, Deputy Associate Director. Mr. Carson's account is included here to provide a context for the roster and charts representing the past 29 years.

As Mr. Carson notes, the record of OPPE activities breaks conveniently into four periods:

- 1949-1960, during most of which Dr. Charles V. Kidd presided over a small, issue-oriented staff constituting the Office of Research Planning. As head of that group, he worked with three NIH Directors: Drs. Rolla E. Dyer, William H. Sebrell, Jr., and James A. Shannon.
- 1960-1968, when the office was under Joseph H. Murtaugh. This was a period of major collaboration with Dr. Shannon, who remained as Director until 1968.
- 1968-1974, when the staff was headed by Dr. Thomas J. Kennedy, Jr., who served two Directors, Drs. Robert Q. Marston and Robert S. Stone.
- July 1975 to the present, when the office has been led by Dr. Joseph G. Perpich, working with Dr. Donald S. Fredrickson as Director.

The accomplishments of this office have been many, primarily because of the excellent people who have worked here. Some have gone on to careers at the senior level in the Government and the private sector. They have been a vital part of the NIH family, and we are proud of the superb support they have given the Director, NIH, the Institutes, and the biomedical research community.

Joseph G. Perpich, M.D., J.D.
Associate Director for
Program Planning and Evaluation

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE NIH OFFICE OF PROGRAM PLANNING AND EVALUATION

Prepared by
Bruce F. Carson
Deputy Associate Director for
Program Planning and Evaluation

The Office of Program Planning and Evaluation began in 1949 as a one-man Office of Research Planning, reporting to the Director, NIH. Since then, the OPPE--which has undergone several name changes and waxed modestly and then waned in staff totals--has served the Director, NIH, in diverse ways, but principally as a general-purpose contingent within his immediate staff. Its strengths have been in writing and analysis and in development of certain needed data bases. Its focus has been on issues of immediate concern to the Director, NIH. Its continuing mandates have been in program planning, analysis, and evaluation, in monitoring and development of legislation, and in Congressional relations oversight.

The record of OPPE activities breaks conveniently into four periods:

First is the period 1949 to 1960, through most of which Dr. Charles V. Kidd presided over a small issue-oriented staff (never more than two or three assistants) constituting the Office of Research Planning. In this capacity, Dr. Kidd--an economist and capable writer with a view to the larger issues--served three NIH Directors, Drs. Rolla E. Dyer, William H. Sebrell, Jr., and James A. Shannon. During this period NIH's categorical organization and its grants management and peer review systems took essentially their current form. Plans dealt mainly with national or strategic dimensions for health research rather than program or budget details; most planning proposals came from prestigious, non-Federal advisory groups; and the plans were principally for the benefit of Appropriations committees.

The second period--from 1960 to 1968, under Joseph S. Murtaugh--was one of major collaboration with Dr. Shannon, Director from 1955 to 1968. During this time OPPE grew rapidly toward its mature form. Main functions included drafting of testimony and position papers, speech writing, concept development for NIH programs, and development of data bases for health research activities, including the national picture for health research resources. Mr. Murtaugh, a liberal arts generalist with impressive gifts of clear and forceful exposition, became Dr. Shannon's key assistant in defining and defending NIH policies, goals, priorities, and research strategies.

In 1962 Mr. Murtaugh set up the three-part structure (Program Analysis, Legislative Analysis, and Resources Analysis) with which OPPE operated until the fall of 1979. As Office Director he encouraged rapid strengthening of staff in the area of resources analysis and developed at a more moderate pace the Office's legislative role. Program analysis flourished briefly with a large but temporary addition of DRG statistical staff, then returned to a small nuclear group which began to grow again in 1967.

The staffing for OPPE peaked in 1967 (64 full-time permanent positions authorized), due largely to the Wooldridge Committee recommendations for augmentation of the NIH planning staff and for more emphasis on long-range planning. As a result of the Wooldridge recommendations, the Advisory Committee to the Director, NIH, was established, with OPPE responsible for staff support. For NIH in this period, the impact of formal planning processes in the Department remained minimal, though an Assistant Secretary for Planning was designated in the midsixties, and a formal PPB (planning, programming, and budgeting) system was installed.

The third phase of OPPE development was under Dr. Thomas J. Kennedy, Jr., an M.D. from the intramural Heart program who had also directed the Division of Research Facilities and Resources. He became Director in 1968, and, for the next six years, served Drs. Robert Q. Marston and Robert S. Stone in a troubled period of consolidation and stop-and-go growth for NIH. In this period, under a new Administration, all existing program commitments for HEW were examined and many were challenged. A series of HEW Assistant Secretaries for Planning and Evaluation held strong policy roles in the Department, and HEW health planning and evaluation functions were formalized and significantly strengthened.

Necessarily, the OPPE Program Analysis staff grew (though modestly), not only to handle new planning requirements but also to help explain and defend NIH peer review and NIH's continuing need for research training and institutional support programs, which OMB was proposing to phase down (or out) across Government. Similarly, there was need to clarify and document NIH processes for planning and priority-setting. The OPPE legislative role also grew in this period to meet needs for burgeoning health manpower programs added to NIH in 1968, and to deal with demands by various categorical disease groups seeking a larger cut of the total health research pie.

Research funds clearly had ceased to grow in the late 1960's after 13-fold expansion in the preceding decade. Categorical research pressures peaked--but were not dissipated--in the unsuccessful effort by cancer lobby groups to take NCI out of NIH in 1970-1971. Through all of this, the priority for national resources analysis in OPPE dropped significantly, and OPPE staffing for this function fell steadily through attrition.

The fourth (and still continuing) period in OPPE operations began in July 1975, when Dr. Donald S. Fredrickson returned to NIH as Director after a brief period as President of the Institute of Medicine. Through all but the early months of this period, the OPPE has been headed by Dr. Joseph G. Perpich.

Highlights of OPPE planning and related staff support during this period include:

- Efforts to clarify the boundaries and necessary points of interface between NIH's research mission and the missions of other health agencies, especially in health care and regulation.
- Efforts (in association with the Director and Dr. Seymour Perry) to develop more effective mechanisms for information exchange across points of interface between research and other health missions, leading to the NIH "consensus development" concept and creation of the Office of Medical Applications of Research (OMAR).
- Various activities in support of the study of NIH and ADAMHA by the President's Biomedical Research Panel.
- Development, operation, and updating of annual program review processes between the Director, NIH, and individual BID Directors. Purpose: preparation for appropriations hearings and highlighting of program issues for next year's budget submission. (The reviews now include evaluation activities and lead to development of an NIH Research Plan.)
- Principal staff responsibility for development of an HEW health research strategy and plan, as required by then-Secretary Califano, including a set of principles for support of health research and a series of cooperative interagency health research initiatives. (The Director, NIH, chairs the HHS Steering Committee, and Dr. Perpich is Executive Secretary.)
- Staff support for four other policy-oriented committees chaired by Dr. Fredrickson, with Dr. Perpich as Executive Secretary: (1) the Advisory Committee to the Director, NIH; (2) the Interagency Committee on Recombinant DNA Research; (3) the Committee on Health and Medicine of the Federal Coordinating Council on Science, Engineering, and Technology (a part of OSTP); and (4) the Interagency Radiation Research Committee.
- Monitoring and advising on proposals in the 96th Congress for major, controversial changes in the statutory base for NIH activities.
- Efforts by the Director's Advisory Committee to clarify and find solutions to issues dividing government and university partners in health research; and similar efforts to strengthen research cooperation between these partners and industry.
